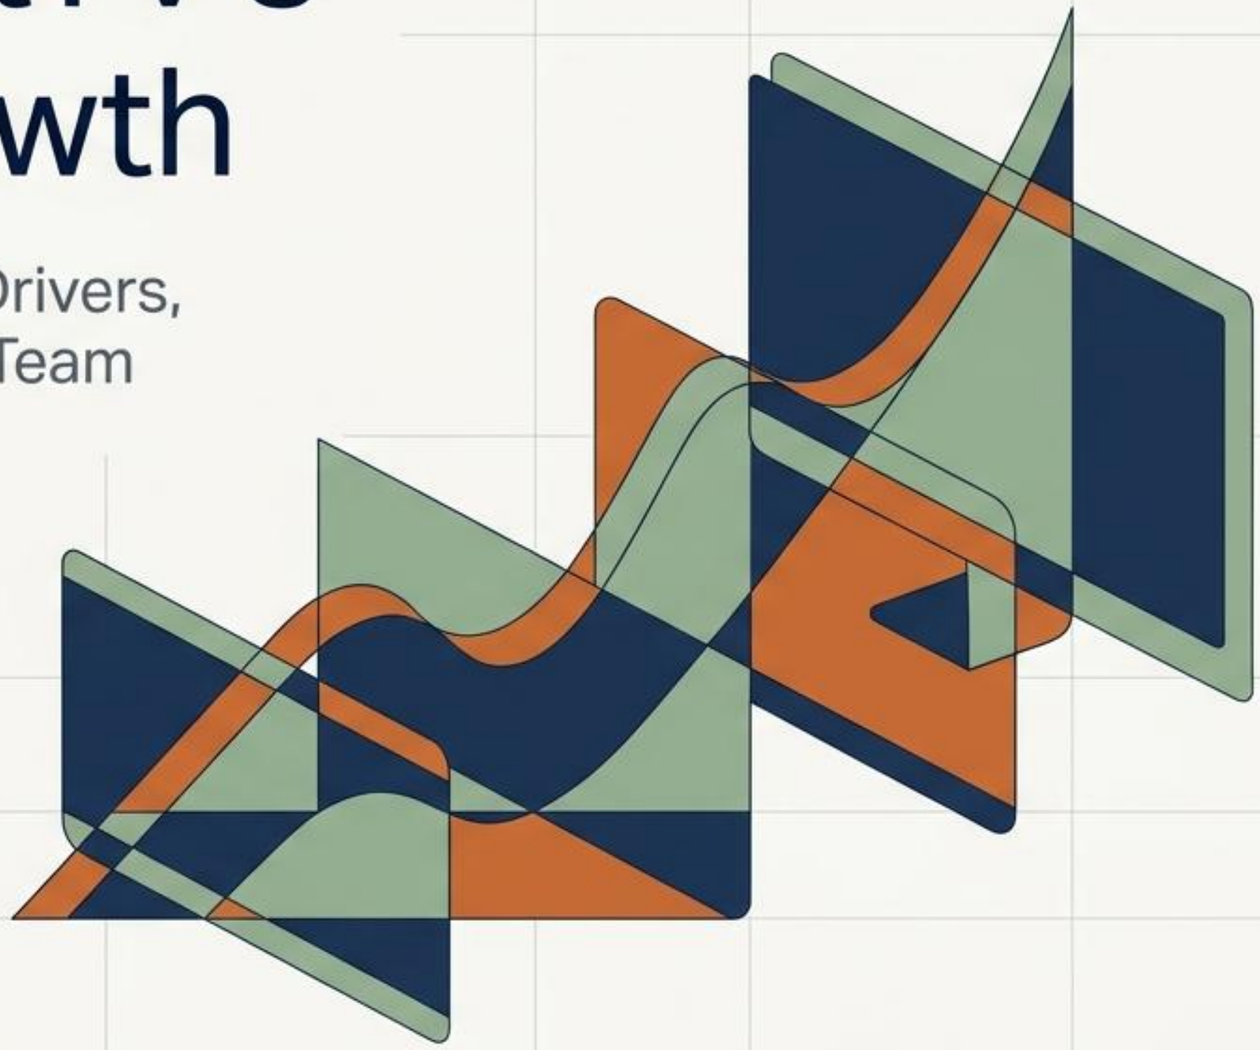
Powering BrightTV's Next Era of Growth

Viewership Analytics, Consumption Drivers, and Strategic Initiatives for the CVM Team



The Mandate: Grow the subscription base this financial year.
The Strategy: Optimize mid-week retention and unlock underserved demographics.

Usage Trends

The core audience is hyper-engaged but narrow. Growth requires expanding beyond young adult males.

Influencing Factors

Live sports and localized music dictate the current cadence, creating a highly volatile weekly viewing cycle.

Content Fixes

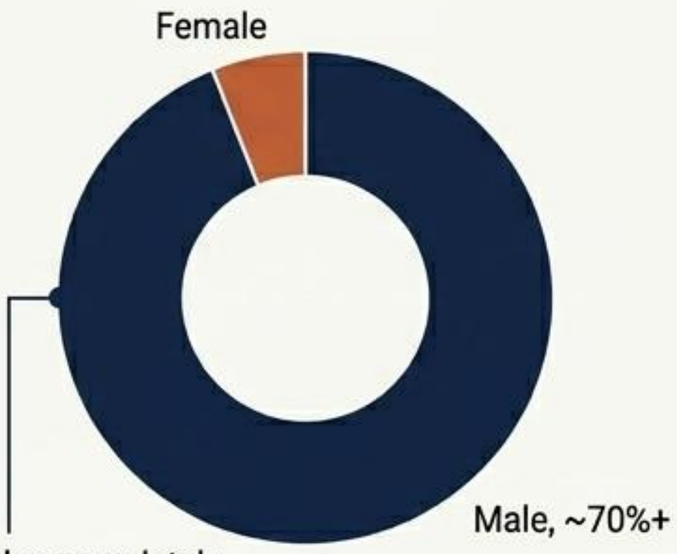
Introduce mid-week blockbuster drops and sports shoulder programming to flatten the "Mid-Week Slump."

Growth Initiatives

Deploy multi-generational family bundling and female-skewing lifestyle content to unlock latent household market share.

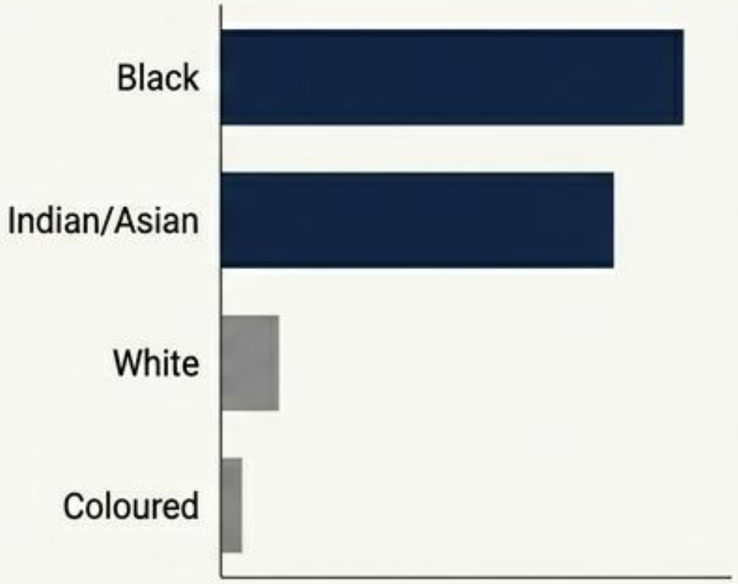
The BrightTV Audience is Heavily Skewed Toward Young Adult Males

Gender Breakdown

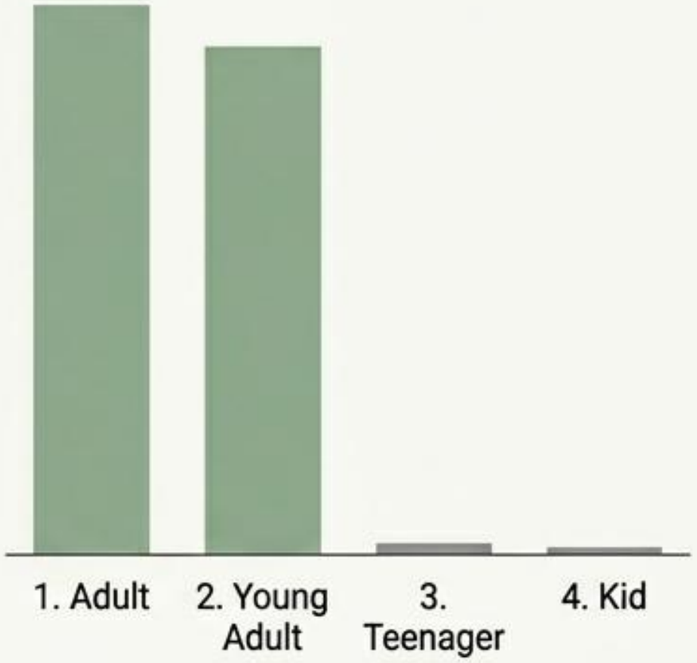


Males completely dominate the subscriber base.

Racial Demographics

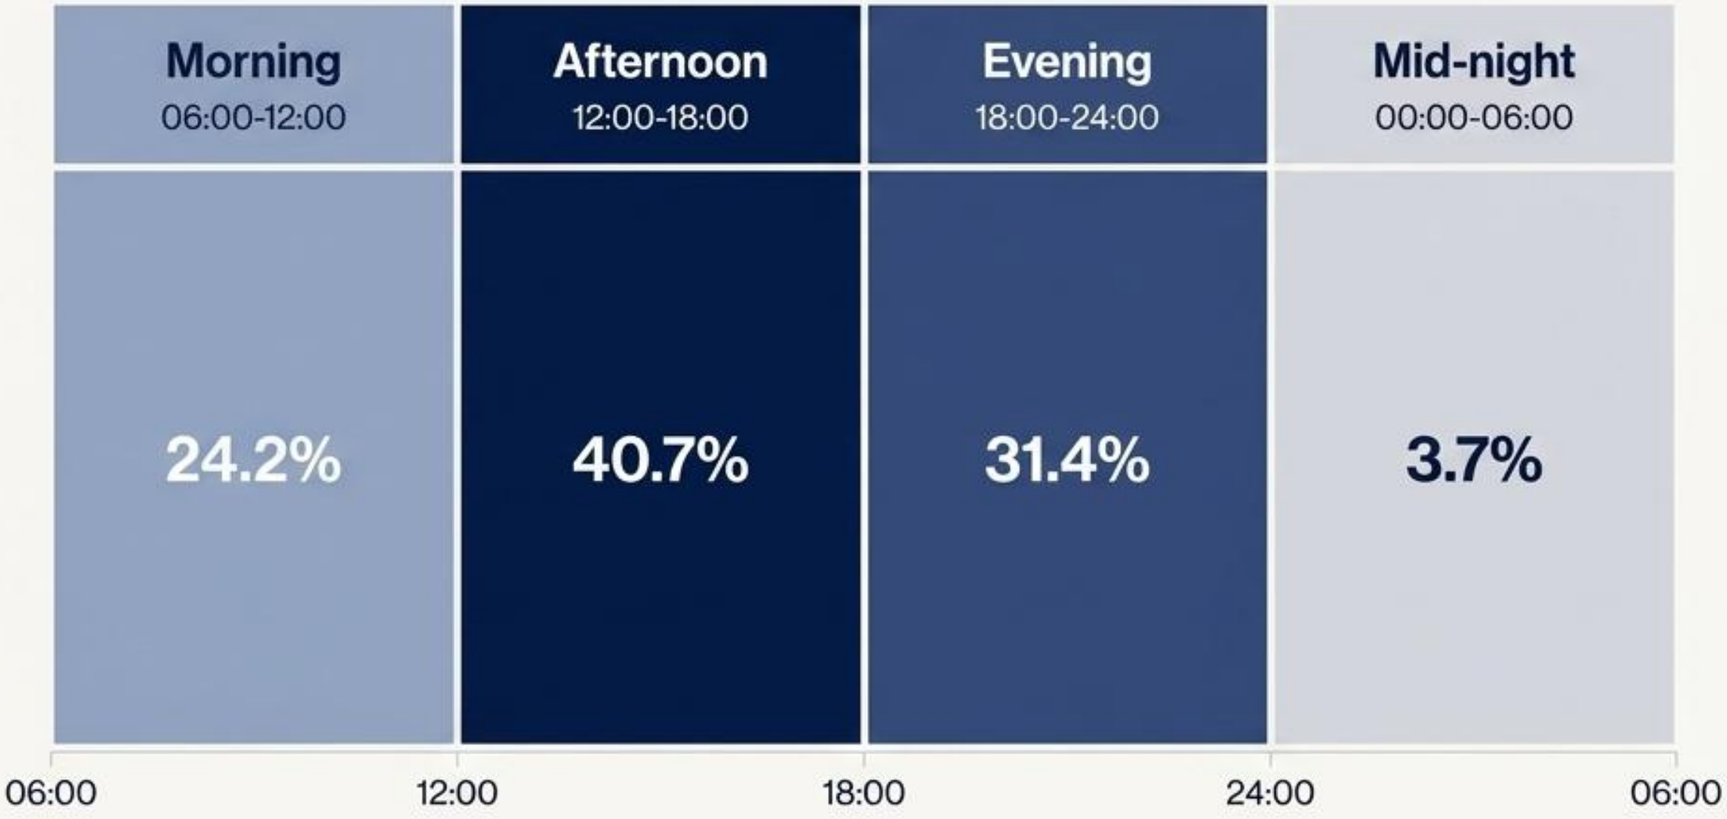


Age Classification



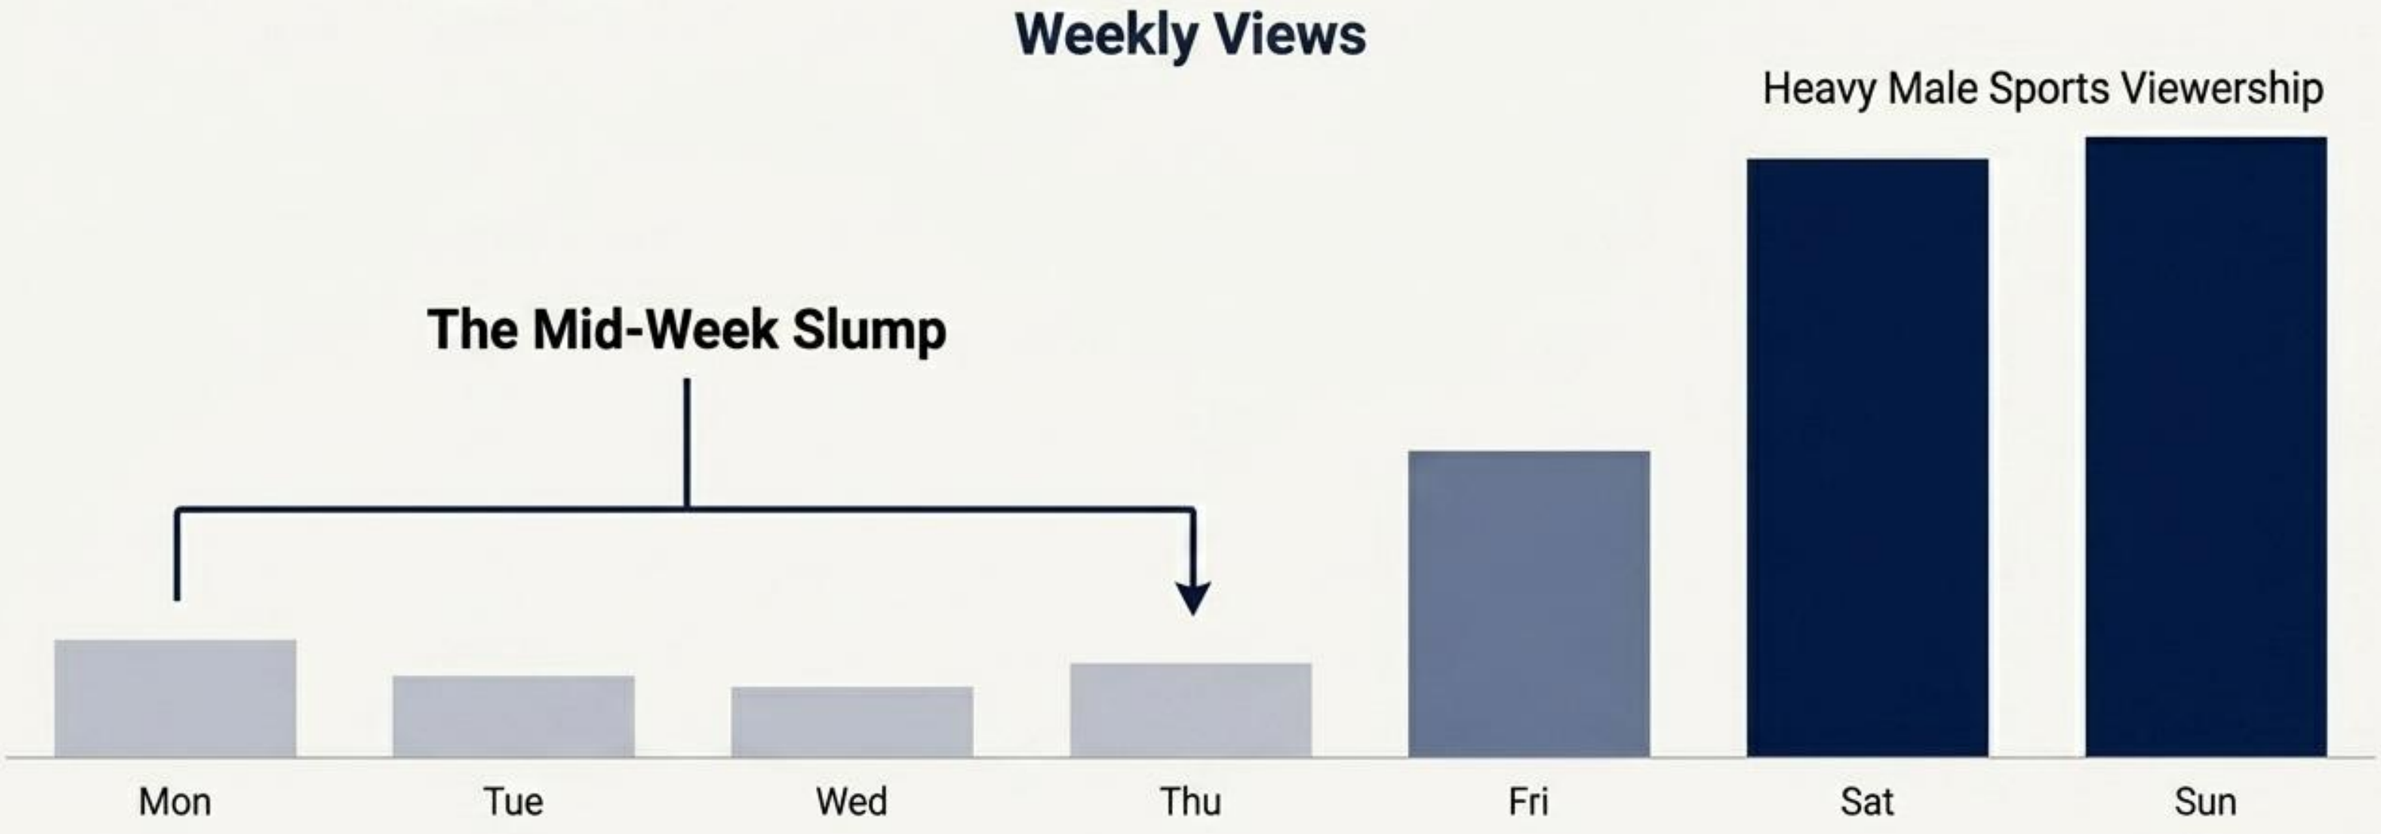
Key Insight: Our current product-market fit is exceptionally strong within a narrow corridor. Expanding the subscription base requires acquiring the missing household demographics: women, teens, and children.

Viewership Peaks from Mid-Afternoon Through the Evening



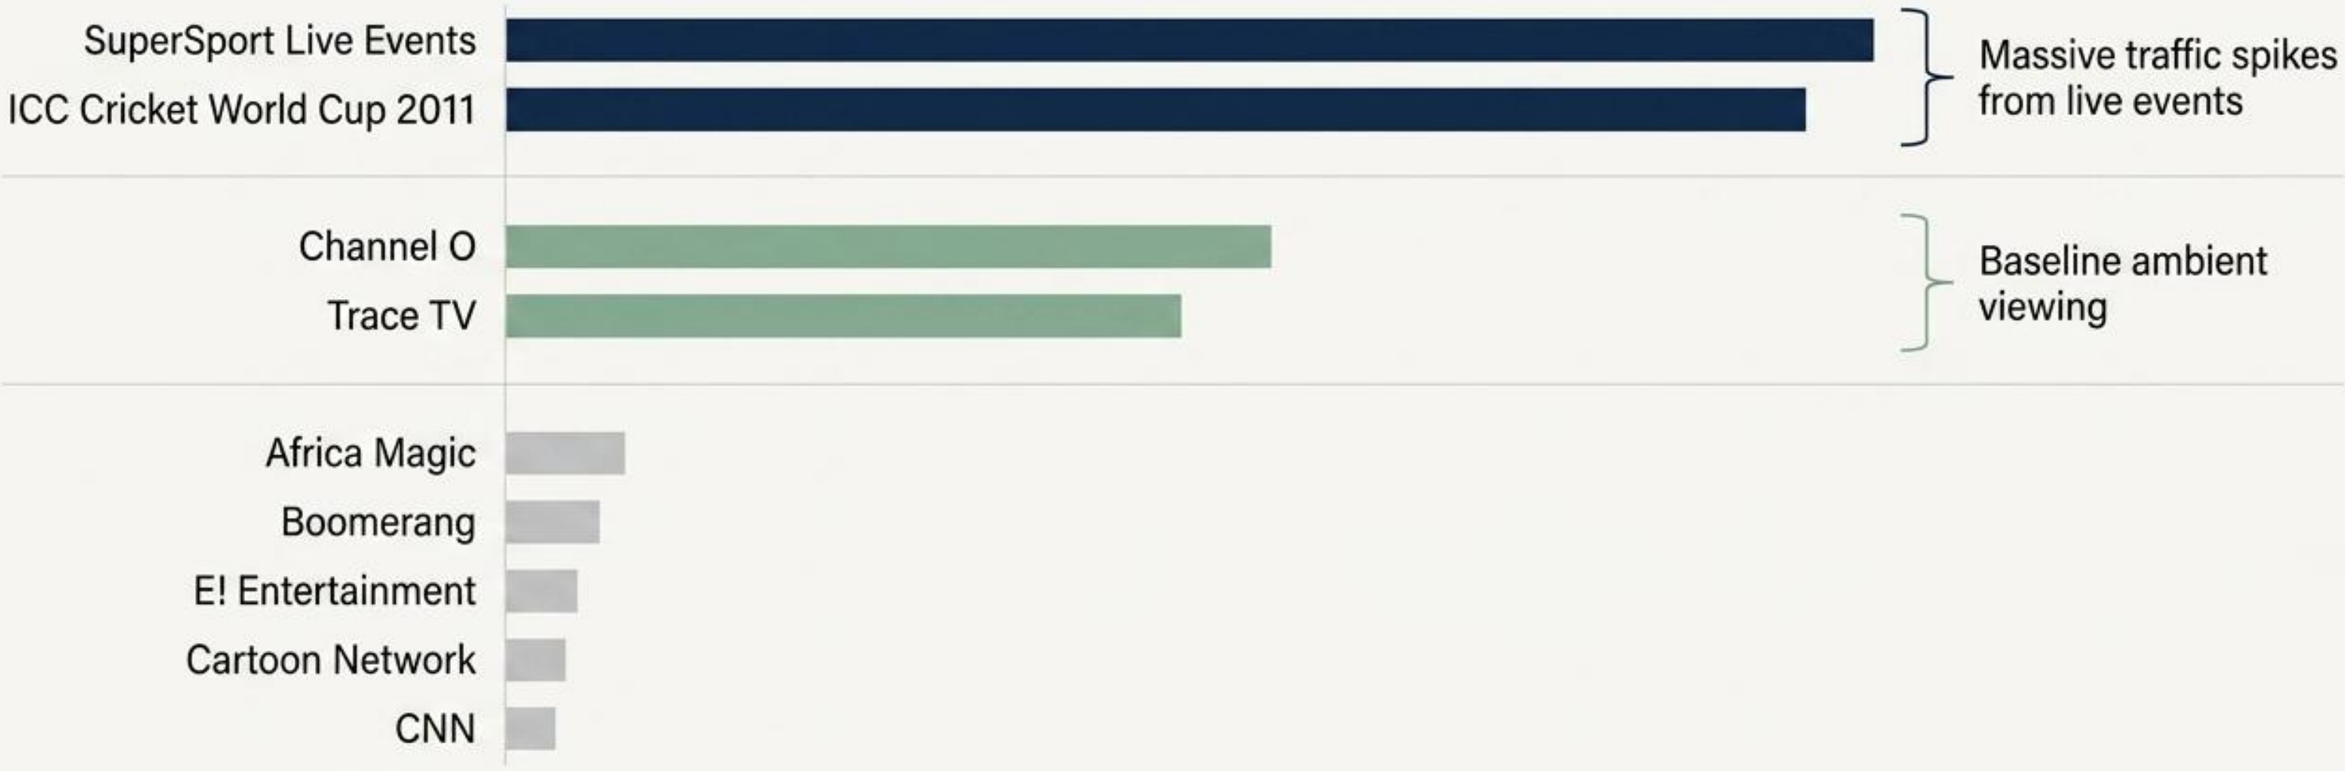
By adjusting UTC timestamps to localized SA working hours, we see a clear post-lunch to evening consumption cycle. Morning and late-night blocks are severely underutilized, representing latent inventory for targeted programming.

The Mid-Week Slump is the Primary Barrier to Daily Active User Growth



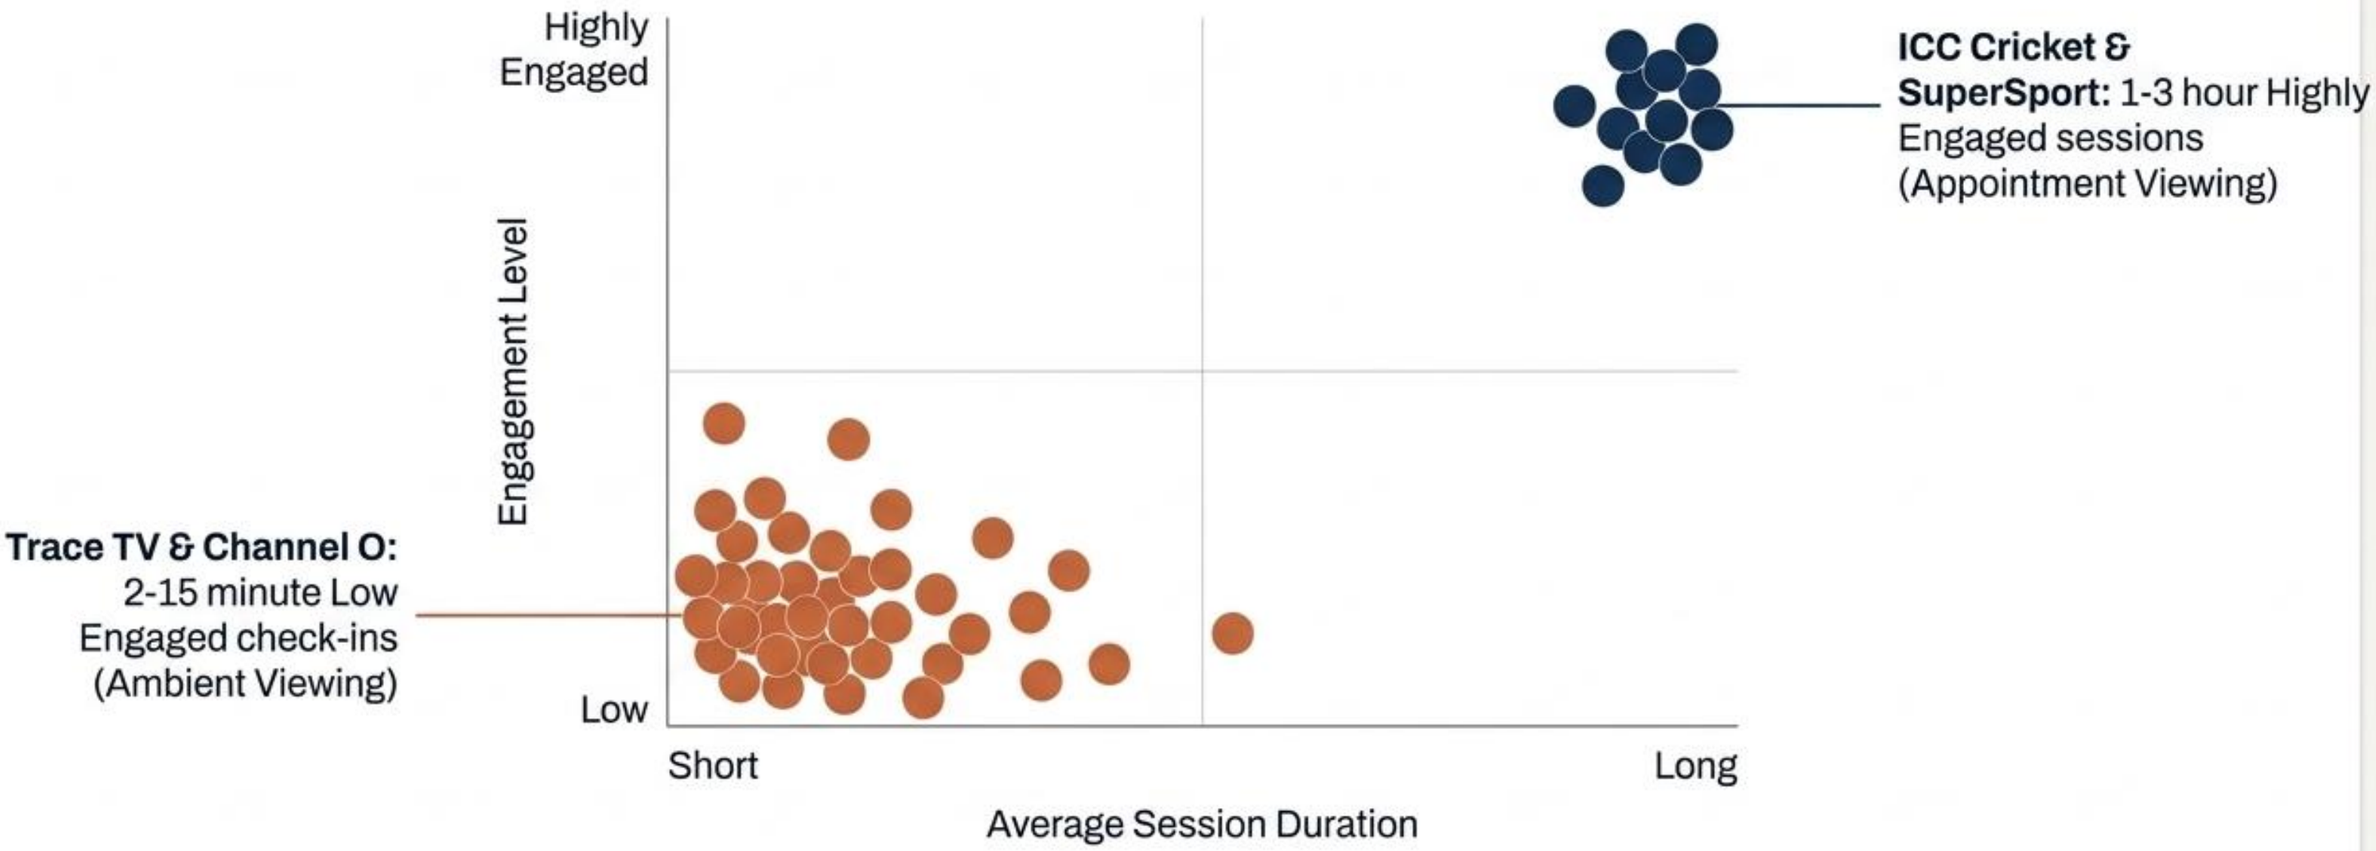
Current consumption relies heavily on weekend traffic surges. Because this traffic is driven primarily by male sports viewers, the platform lacks a compelling daily habit loop to retain users from Monday through Thursday.

Live Sports and Localized Music Dominate Viewer Attention



Content type is the single largest factor dictating whether a user opens BrightTV. Live sports provide massive spikes in traffic, while local music and entertainment channels provide baseline ambient viewing.

The Engagement Curve: Ambient Check-ins vs. Active Immersion



Not all views are equal. Sports drive 'Appointment Viewing'—infrequent but highly engaged, long-duration sessions. Music channels drive 'Ambient Viewing'—frequent, short check-ins. A healthy growth strategy requires both to balance retention and frequency.

Diagnostic Matrix: The Friction Between Weekend and Weekday Habits

	The Weekend Surge	The Weekday Slump
Viewer Volume	High	Low
Dominant Demographics	Adult Males	Fragmented
Peak Hours	Afternoon (40.7%)	Evening (31.4%)
Top Content	ICC Cricket & Live Events	Trace TV & Channel O
Engagement	Deep / Active Immersion	Shallow / Ambient Browsing

Weekends have a clear, magnetic hook (live matches) that demands attention. Weekdays rely entirely on casual browsing without a strong anchor, resulting in churn risk.

Strategic Initiative 1: Filling the Mid-Week Valley

By deliberately counter-scheduling premium, non-live content on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays, we convert weekend-only viewers into daily active users.

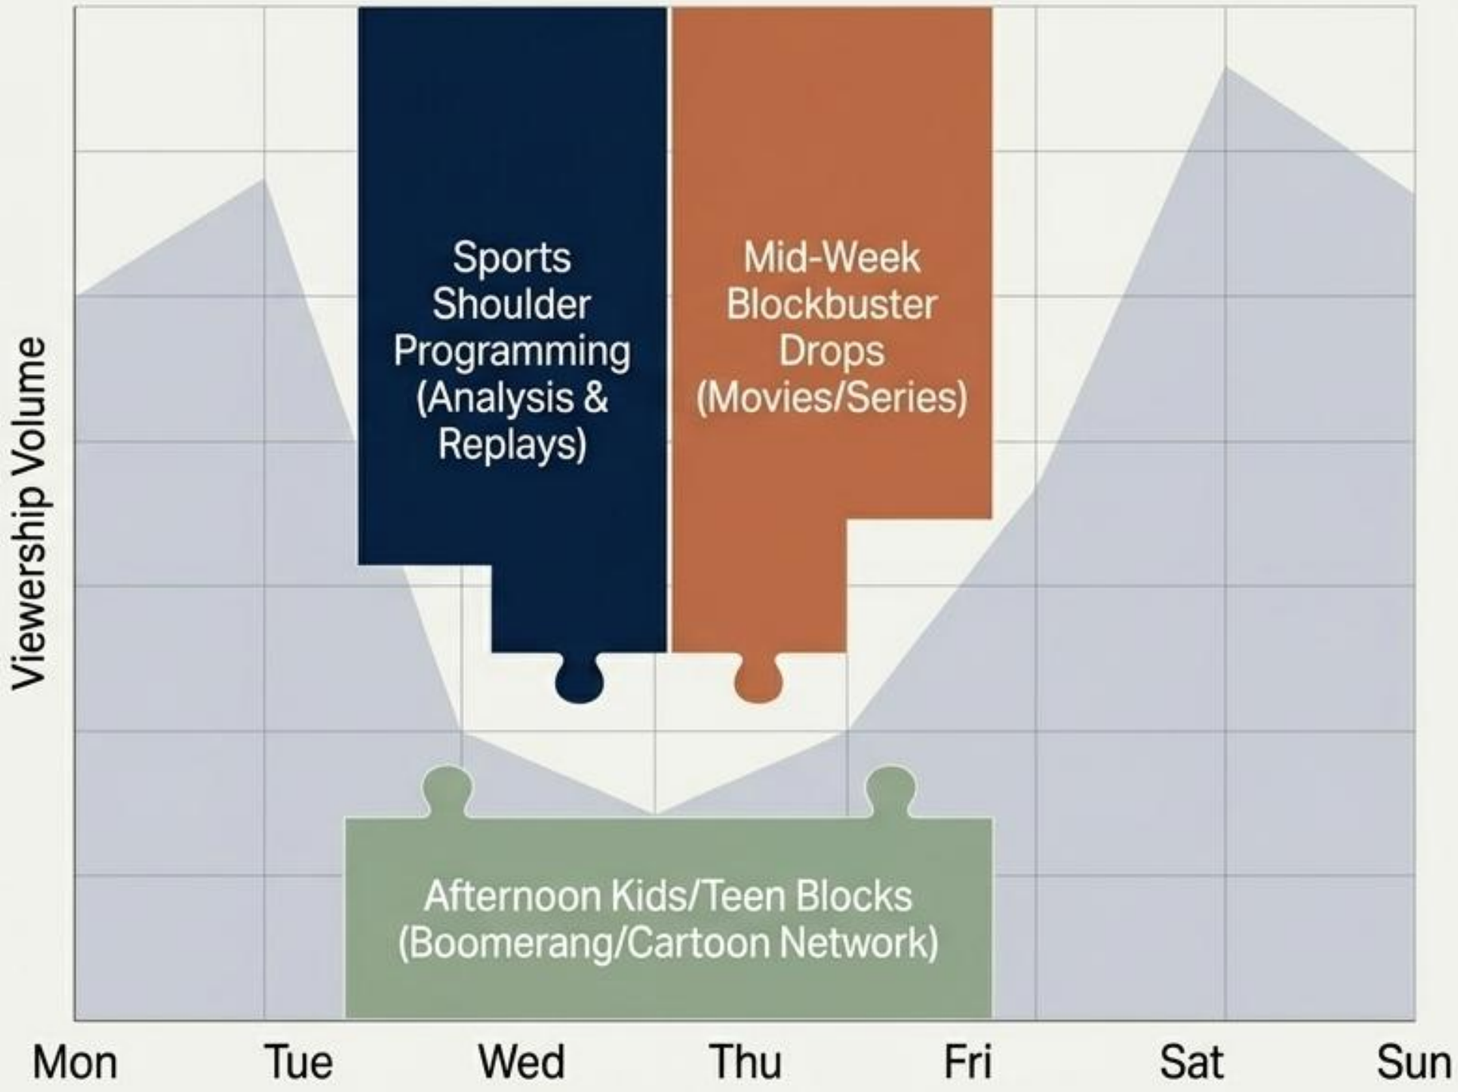
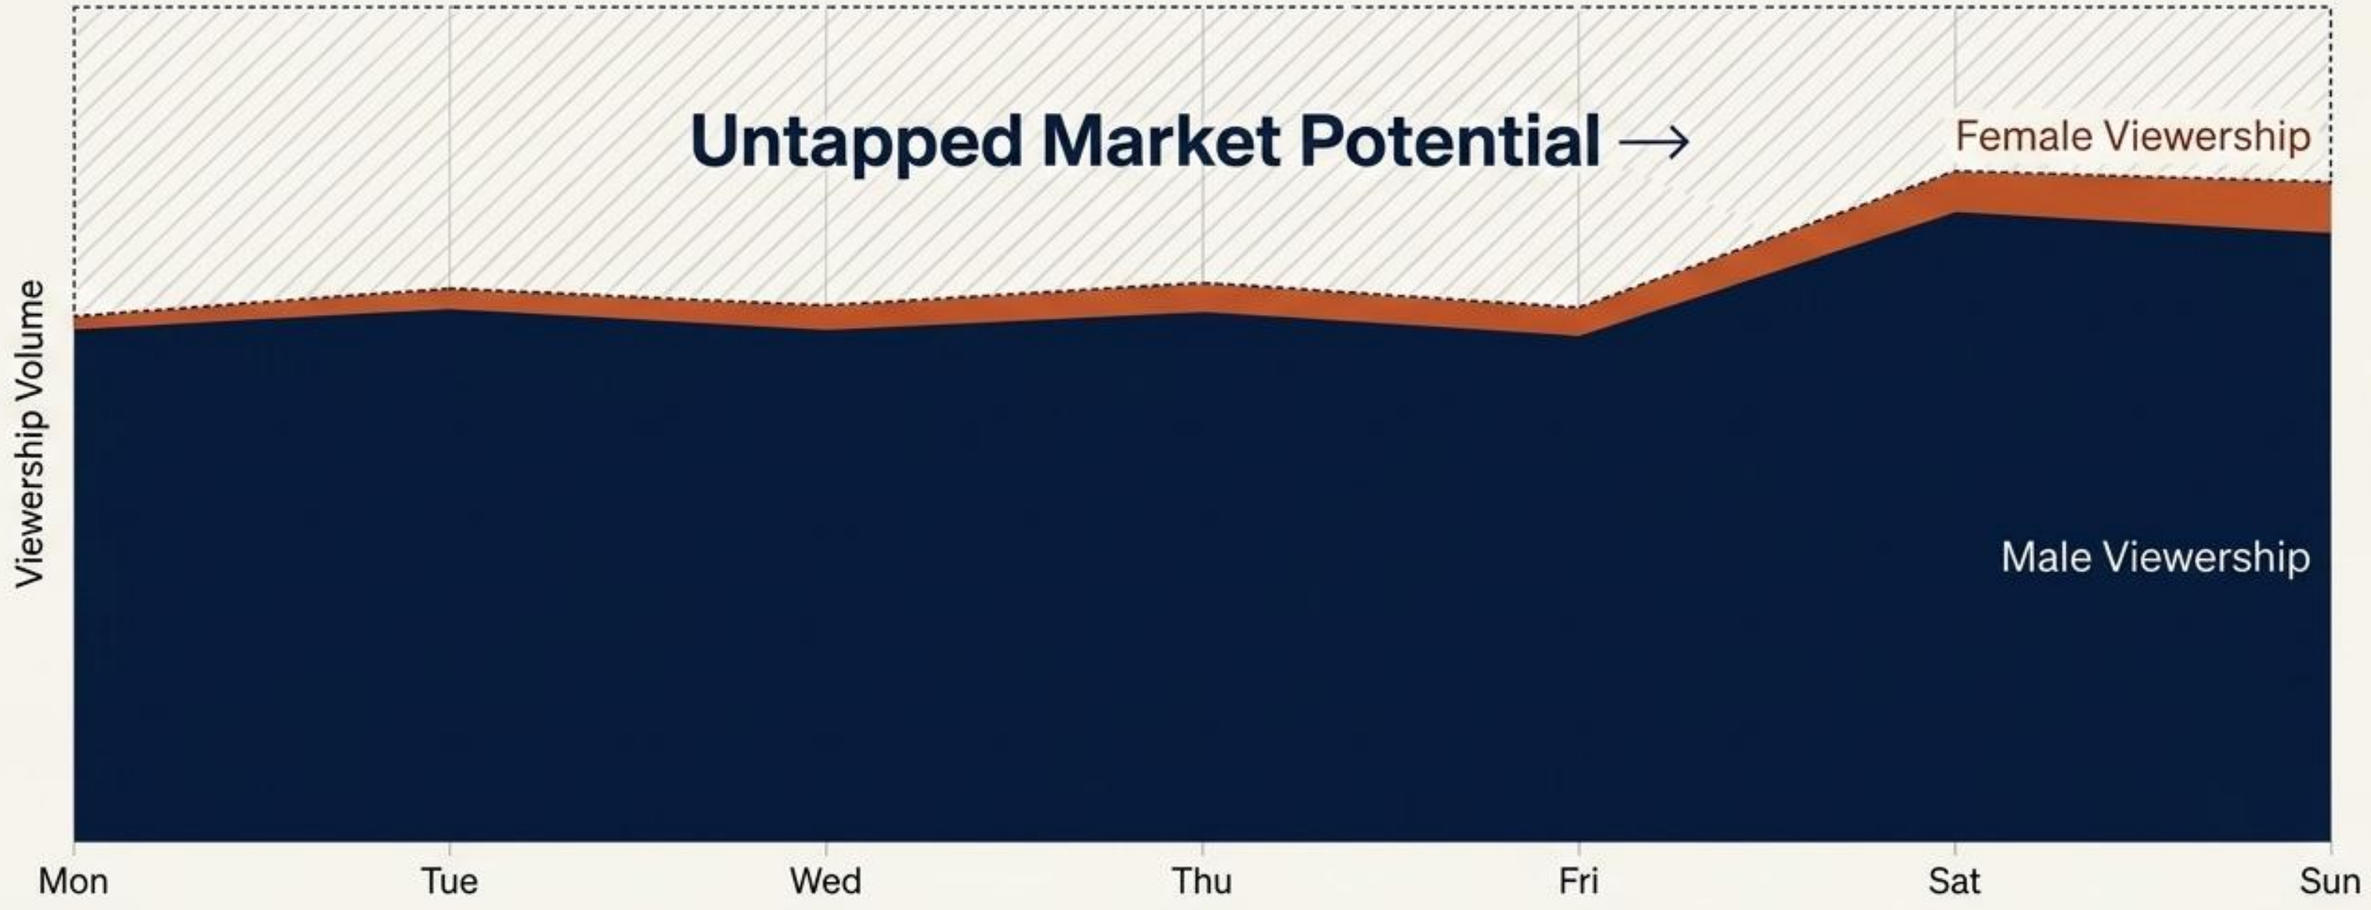
This initiative targets the significant drop in engagement during the mid-week period by introducing high-value content anchors that complement live sports and weekend habits.
By offering compelling content outside of the live sports window, we can increase the frequency and duration of user sessions, establishing a stronger, more consistent daily habit across the entire week.



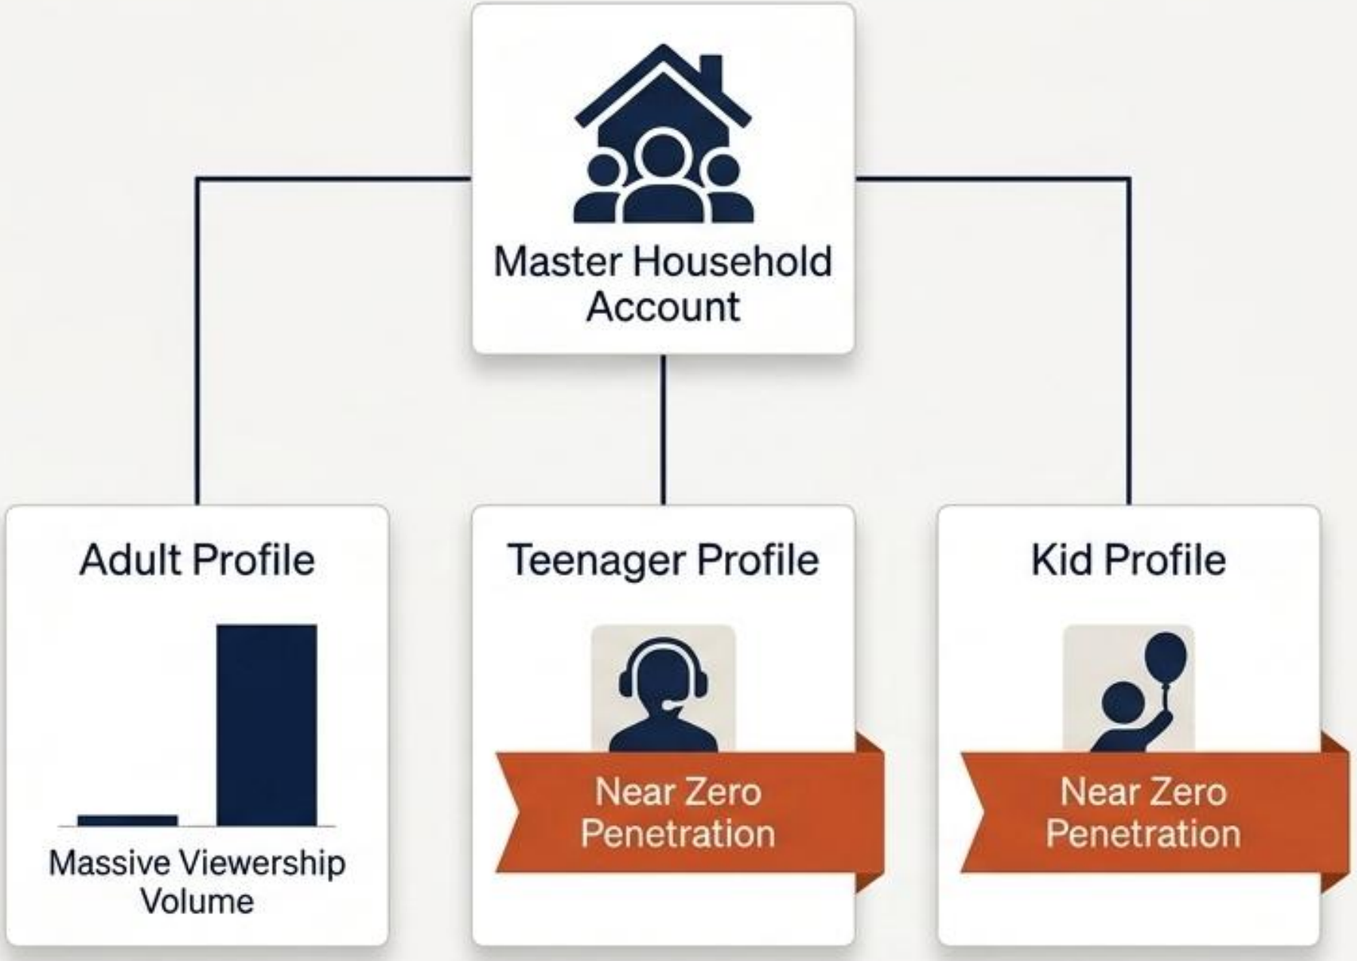
Strategic Initiative 2: Unlocking the Gender Opportunity



The current sports-heavy slant limits household penetration. To grow the subscription base, we must diversify the hook. Investing in and heavily promoting premium female-skewing lifestyle, reality, and drama content (e.g., E! Entertainment, Africa Magic) is the most direct path to net-new subscriber growth.

Strategic Initiative 3: Multi-Generational Bundling

Currently, "Kid" and "Teen" profiles are a fractional anomaly in viewership.
Introduce "Family Packs" or linked profiles to encourage adult male subscribers to share BrightTV with their households.
A product embedded in the whole family's routine is highly resistant to subscription churn.



Strategic Initiative 4: Data-Driven CVM Interventions

Event-Triggered Pushes.

Send automated start-time notifications for live ICC/SuperSport events to guarantee 'Active' session starts.

Ambient to Active Funnels.

During short, mid-week 'Ambient' sessions on Trace TV or Channel O, deploy in-app overlays.

Cross-Pollination.

Use overlays to promote weekend sports or upcoming Africa Magic premieres, weaving distinct viewing habits together.

The BrightTV Growth Flywheel: One Cohesive Solution

Fixing the mid-week slump and fixing the gender gap are the same problem. Diversified mid-week content is the key to female acquisition, daily habit formation, and overall subscription growth.

Implementation Roadmap for the Financial Year

Q1 (Immediate)	Q2 (Short-Term)	Q3 (Medium-Term)	Q4 (Long-Term)
Operationalize CVM Push Notifications for live events; adjust scheduling to highlight existing mid-week content.	Launch 'Mid-Week Blockbuster' campaigns; push Sports Shoulder programming to Tuesdays/ Wednesdays.	Introduce 'Family Pack' multi-profile bundling to incentivize household sharing.	Aggressive content acquisition and marketing blitz focused on female-skewing lifestyle and drama (E!, Africa Magic).

Commanding the Next Era of BrightTV

- ☑ Usage Diagnosed
- ☑ Friction Identified
- ☑ Growth Initiatives Mapped

BrightTV already commands the loyalty of a highly engaged core audience. By activating the mid-week schedule and inviting the entire household onto the platform, we guarantee a larger, more resilient, and highly profitable subscription base for this financial year and beyond.

Prepared for the CVM Team and CEO.